

The Website

Conversion Checklist

40 checks that turn visitors into enquiries — the same list I work through at the start of every client audit.

Most websites don't have a traffic problem. They have a conversion problem: people arrive, look, and leave without ever making contact. Work through this with your own site open in another tab. Anything you can't honestly tick is a candidate for your next fix — and the sections are ordered by how much they typically cost you.

1 THE FIRST FIVE SECONDS

- ☐ A stranger can tell what you do within five seconds of landing
- ☐ Your headline names the outcome you deliver, not your job title
- ☐ A clear primary action is visible without scrolling
- ☐ Your offer is understandable without scrolling
- ☐ The page shows meaningful content in under 2.5 seconds

Why — Visitors decide whether to stay in seconds. If your hero says "Welcome to our website," you've spent your single best moment saying nothing.

2 CLARITY OF OFFER

- ☐ Each service describes the outcome, not just the activity
- ☐ You've named who it's for — and implicitly who it isn't
- ☐ Pricing is stated, or at least a starting point or range
- ☐ No jargon a first-time visitor wouldn't recognise
- ☐ Someone could explain your offer to a colleague after one read

Why — Ambiguity is the most expensive thing on a website. "Strategic brand solutions" gives a buyer nothing to act on.

3 PROOF

- ☐ At least one named client or case study with real numbers
- ☐ Results are specific — "23% lift", not "significant growth"
- ☐ Testimonials carry a full name, role and company
- ☐ Any logos shown are clients, not just tools you use
- ☐ Every impressive claim is evidenced on the same page

Why — This is usually the biggest gap. Specific and modest beats vague and grand: a measured 23% is more believable than "explosive growth."

4 CALLS TO ACTION

- ☐ One primary action per page, repeated as the visitor scrolls
- ☐ Button text says what happens next — "Book a free call", not "Submit"
- ☐ There's a CTA immediately after your proof, where interest peaks
- ☐ The commitment matches readiness — a call, not a contract
- ☐ Every CTA is comfortably tappable with a thumb

Why — Most sites ask once, at the very bottom. By the time someone is convinced, the button is three screens away.

5 FRICTION

- ☐ Your form asks only for what you genuinely need to reply
- ☐ Every extra field earns its place — each one costs you responses
- ☐ There's an alternative to the form: email, phone, WhatsApp or a booking link
- ☐ Nobody has to create an account to talk to you
- ☐ You state your response time — "I reply within 48 hours"

Why — Every field is a small tax on intent. Phone number, company size and budget dropdowns are where enquiries quietly die.

6 MOBILE

- ☐ You've opened your own site on your own phone this month
- ☐ Nothing scrolls sideways at any screen width
- ☐ Tap targets are at least 44px
- ☐ Text is readable without pinching to zoom
- ☐ Long sections are shortened or collapsed, not merely stacked

Why — Plenty of B2B research now starts on a phone, even when the decision happens on a desktop later. A desktop-first site loses people before they ever see it properly.

7 TRUST SIGNALS

- ☐ A real photograph of a real person
- ☐ Your location is stated
- ☐ Company or registration details are present
- ☐ A link to an active professional profile
- ☐ Nothing on the page is still a placeholder

Why — Placeholders — [XX]%, lorem ipsum, an empty "project image" box — signal an unfinished business. It's the fastest way to lose credibility you'd otherwise earned.

8 MEASUREMENT

- ☐ Analytics is installed and actually collecting data
- ☐ You know how many enquiries you received last month
- ☐ You know which page they came from
- ☐ Form submissions and CTA clicks are tracked as events
- ☐ You've looked at the numbers within the last 30 days

Why — Without this, every change is a guess. You cannot improve a number you don't have.

Your score

Count your ticks out of 40.

34–40	Strong foundation. Your next gains are in traffic and content, not conversion.
24–33	Solid, with clear gaps. Fix sections 3 and 4 first — proof and calls to action.
Under 24	Your site is likely costing you enquiries every week. Start with 1, 3 and 4.

Want a second pair of eyes?

I run this audit properly on client sites — including the parts a checklist can't reach: funnel drop-off, heatmaps, search intent and competitor comparison. A recent audit lifted a client's conversion rate by 23% and organic traffic by 30% in the first two months.

The first conversation is free and there's no pitch — bring your site and I'll tell you what I'd fix first.
